These virtual workshops are intended for district staff who work directly with teachers, such as principals, assistant principals, instructional coaches, and department chairs. They are an extension of the Center’s Re-Opening School Design Workshop series, but your district does not need to be registered for the series to participate.

Rationale: Planning for the re-opening of school is really challenging and district teams have a great deal to plan. In order to bring the planning for teaching and learning to life in the classroom, the Connecticut Center for School Change is offering two workshops for coaches, supervisors, and similar roles who can help take the work to teachers.

INTENDED OUTCOMES

Session One: Participants will use a framework for identifying high quality instruction for their districts, and what that looks like in a blended setting. They will also consider issues around assessment of student learning.

This is a repeat of Re-Opening Schools Design Workshop, session 3.

Session Two: Participants will consider what their aspirations are for teaching, learning and assessment in a blended setting for their work with teachers, and will generate next steps.

Pricing:
FREE for educators from districts already registered for the Center’s Re-Opening School Design Workshop series

$50 per person OR
$250 for a district team up to 8 members
$400 for a district team of 9 or more members

Register today to reserve your space!
https://forms.gle/23rqf4vxdAhokKH67

PLEASE NOTE: The workshop will use both Zoom and Google. You MUST have a Google account and a Zoom account in order to participate. The registration form asks you to specify which email you use for which account, so please have that information available before registering.